A BIT OF HISTORY.

I take it for granted that most people have read or heard of the attempt of Philip, King of Spain, to knock the British Isles into a cocked hat, because Elizabeth Queen of England refused to marry him.
It will be remembered that Philip tried out a large fleet, called the Invincible Armada, by which he intended to wreck his vengeance upon England and her Protestant Queen. But the English were on the alert and although they were inferior in numbers to the Spanish, yet in what they wanted in number they made up in courage and cunning. The rough westerly winds in the channel and the fire ships of the English scared the very life out of the Spanish soldiers and sailors; and rather than face these stormy westerly winds, and the annoying English ships, they fled north along the east coast of England and Scotland, thinking to get home by going through the Pentland Firth, into the Atlantic, and by so doing evade the English channel and the dangers connected therewith. At this point history goes no further than merely stating that the greater part of this formidable fleet got wrecked in the North Sea so that only a few escaped to Spain to tell the tale. But the real particulars of this disaster, and what was the cause of it is not recorded. Therefore, believing, as I do, that I am the only one alive who is in possession of the facts relating to the destruction of this mighty Armada, I deem it my duty to give them to the world so that they may not be lost, and also that future historians may be enabled to give the true and proper account of how these ships came to grief. Before commencing this narration, I may say that what I am about to relate is true in every sense of the word. I have received the whole particulars from the lips of an aged grandmother who died many years ago, who in turn received them from her grandmother, who received them from grandmother or grandfather, I forget which, or who was present on the occasion and who can wish for better authority than that?

When the news came to the Orkney Islands that the Spanish fleet was on its way further, there was widespread confirmation on every side, as these islands were totally unprotected on this occasion.
The Lord Lieutenant of the Orkneys at that time was the celebrated Earl Patrick Stewart, nephew of King James V. of Scotland. He hastily called together his council, which only consisted of himself and Bailie Tulloch of Kirkwall, in order to consult upon the best method of disposing of the Spanish ships. Bailie Tulloch proposed a general fast throughout the Islands but this did not all find favor in the eyes of Earl Patrick Stewart who, I am sorry to say, was rather remiss in his religious duties. The consequence was that the council was divided and, of course, nothing could be done but adjourn.
The Earl had, however, a plan of his own which, it will be seen, proved successful to the very letter. He immediately posted off to the Island of Walls, as it was expected that the Spanish fleet would come up the Pentland Firth and anchor in the Longhope, a spacious harbor in that Island. Here Earl Patrick applied himself to Bailie Berton, a noted necro-mancer of that day, to aid him in this momentous crisis. Bailie for a consideration promised to do her level best to frustrate the designs of these expected intruders. Not many days after this, one fine morning what should be seen but the Spanish Armada coming with a fair wind up the Pentland Firth, and directing their course to the Longhope. The time for action had now come; Bailie Berton directed Earl Patrick to take up his position on the lee of a rock on Gaultic Heal and watch the fleet, while she, with ten of her cronies, retired to a large barn in the vicinity and commenced operations.
They at once took a queen stone, used in those days for grinding meal, and having attached a rope to it through the hole in the centre, threw the other end over one of the rafters of the barn. Meanwhile Bailie took a goodly sized stone jar into which she poured a pint of water and set it on a fire in the "ginger snook" and, seating herself on a high stool, gave orders to her sister which to take hold of the rope and hoist up the stone; the reason of these manoeuvres now

which she poured a pint of water and set
it on a fire in the "ginger snook" and,

became apparent, as the stone rose slowly from the barn door and as the water in the stone jar, which was tightly corked, began to be heated up, so the wind outside began to gather strength, so much that when the stone got up to the rafter, the wind was blowing almost to a hurricane. Earl Patrick, from his seat on Gaultic Heal, with joy beheld the fleet scattered and tossed about unable to reach any port of safety. But to insure the complete destruction of this hated Armada it was necessary that the stone should be hoisted over the rafter and descend on the other side, but the united strength of the ten cronies was unequal to the task. In vain did Bailie call out, "Pa, ye devilie, pu' it ye're micht," the stone would not budge. Bailie was in despair, but luckily at that moment she espied Watie Flawa, the cowherd, passing the door.
Now Watie was a big raw-boned overgrown fellow, strong as an ox and not much overburdened with wisdom; nevertheless he was just the one that was needed in this emergency. Bailie lost no time in calling out, "Watie, Watie, come here, man, an' gie's a pu'." Watie entered and seeing the ten cronies hanging on to the end of the rope said, "What are ye devilie about noo?" "Never mind," quoth Bailie, "gie them a pu on that rope an' fetch that stone over the rafter."

"Aye faith will I," quoth Watie, when sitting the action to the word, he seized hold of the rope, and exclaimed, "Now for a pu' a strong pu, and a pu' a regular," with that he gave a vicious tug, which caused the stone to jump like a young kangaroo, and come down slap, bang, on the heads of the cronies, three of whom it killed on the spot. At that instant steam hauled generated in force in the jar on the fire, blew out the stopper with a tremendous force, hitting Bailie under the fifth rib and throwing her senseless in to a pile of straw, with her heels stuck in the air. Watie stood with gaping amazement and surveying the scene, he at length exclaimed, "God save us! he's the deil to pay and no pitch hot." As soon, however, as the stone came over the rafter and the bang flew out the jar, the wind came with a tremendous blast that covered the Pentland with spray and foam so much that Earl Patrick could see nothing but the raging waters. About an hour after wards the wind fell to almost a calm, but the Invincible Armada was nowhere to be seen. But in line thereof the shores around Walls, Flotta and South Ronald-shire were strewn with wreck. Such is the account of the end of the Spanish Armada. Bailie Berton recovered from her surprise and having received her reward had good bye to Earl Patrick Stewart. The old barn where these cronics were performed is gone long ago, but Gaultic Heal still remains, and a splendid light-house is built over the spot where Earl Patrick Stewart sat and beheld the destruction of his enemies.

The Manitoba Free Press in speaking of the Exbridge Piano says: They are genuine works of art, and reflect the highest credit upon the firm which has produced them. The old style of upright pianos is thrown into the shade. The Exbridge Piano has a continuous back rack which will be appreciated in the playing of duets; sitting down to the piano the performer touches a lever and the keyboard is uncovered, and the hinges of the lid turn out of sight, and the instrument presents the same artistic appearance when open as when shut. The Organs manufactured by the Exbridge company are so well-known and liked in the homes

LIFE IN RUPERT'S LAND

IN THE OLDEN TIME.

By James Stewart.

This system of upright dealing came into the peaceful conduct of the Indians of the Hudson's Bay Company. While our neighbors across the boundary were having villages burned, women and children murdered and outrages committed by the red men, the Hudson's Bay Company, having only two or three white men to keep them, were resting in perfect security although surrounded by hundreds of Indians. The difference is easily accounted for. While the United States were fighting the Indians for their territory, the payments agreed upon were entrusted to the hands of rascally agents who had no scruples in the worst kind of treachery. The rascals cheated the poor Indians right and left, while the Hudson's Bay Company, when they applied to the government that made treaties with them, their complaints were disregarded. No wonder then that the poor Indian with starvation staring in his face, took to committing reprisals upon those who shamefully treated them and who had so little regard for solemn treaties. On the other hand the Indians knew that the word of an officer of the company was to be depended upon, and that in case of distress, sickness, or old age, they could look with confidence to the company for help and support. I myself have had considerable experience among the Indians and have always found that, when treated fairly, one could hardly wish for kinder friends. An Indian detests duplicity and deception, and if such be once practiced upon him, it is very hard to regain his confidence. Ignorant persons—and it is only ignorant persons who will do so—will averrally attribute to the Indian and half-breed, but for my part I earnestly wish that some white people whom I have known to my regret were only in possession of half their qualities in the matter of honesty and the designs. It is often said that the company gets such a small value for the furs they received from the Indians. This is true no doubt, but I do not know anyone in their place would have more liberal in that respect. And had the Indians received three times more for his furs he got, I do not think he would have been any better off. These people had no notion of economy, therefore it would matter very little what they got as it would be all spent, and instead of being better off they would have been worse, as it would likely lead to lazy and indolent habits. As it was, however, these people had no cause for complaint, the company being ever ready to assist them when in difficulty. Under the mild rule of the company the Indians were happy and contented, having all the necessities required for their mode of life. In the event of a hunter being unsuccessful in his winter's catch of furs and thereby unable to purchase his outfit for the following season, the company was ever ready to advance with the things they stood in need of. There was very little danger of starvation in those days as game and fish were abundant, and the active Indians who were good hunters received a fair price for their furs. In the summer time when the hunting season was over they got employment, with fair wages by engaging to work on the company's boats to York Factory. Then in the Saskatchewan and Swan River districts, buffalo were plentiful, which afforded food and remunerative employment to a great many persons both Indian and half-breed. I remember when buffalo were plentiful in the vicinity of Pembina and Fort Assiniboine, and even around the ridge where the Manitoba penitentiary now stands, some stay ones were frequently seen. The reason for hunting the buffalo was generally all the year around, excepting the time when the snow came to Upper Fort Garry to trade their furs and pelts, and purchase their necessary supplies. The winter time was the season for getting buffalo robes, as the hair of the animal was then in good condition. These robes were used in making winter dried meat, that is, buffalo made by being hung in the smoke of the tent, instead of being dried by the heat of the sun, as was done in the summer time. The dried meat cured in this manner was highly prized on account of the peculiar flavor imparted to it by the smoke, but it could not be kept so long safe and sweet as that which was dried by the sun. The summer and fall months were seasons for making pemican and dried meat for exportation. The skins of these seasons being unfit to convert into buffalo robes, were manufactured into leather for making moccasins, mittens, and dog harnesses. A camp of buffalo hunters with their wives and families, and their outfits of horses and carts was a novel spectacle. I have frequently seen the ground now occupied by the city of Winnipeg covered with tents to the number of four to five hundred. The community was a mixture of English and French half-breeds with a sprinkling of Cree Indians. Before leaving the settlement of Red River a Council was generally held and a captain was elected by ballot, whose business was to oversee and direct all matters in the camp to settle disputes, regulate the time to start and encamp as well as to give the signal when to start in pursuit of the buffalo. During his term of office, the captain's word was law, and was obeyed by the men who dared to disobey it. Anyone who had the temerity to act contrary to the captain's order was summarily dealt with. The punishment for any act of wilful disobedience consisted of cutting the offender's saddle and harness to pieces, thereby disabling him from joining in the chase. When a herd of buffalo appeared all hands were in readiness and stood earnestly waiting on horseback the signal of the captain to make a start. Each man had his powder loose in his bag, which was hung by his side, while he carried his mouth full of bullets. When the signal was given there was a general stampede, which the hunter who had the best horse stood the best chance of getting the best animal in the herd. Once in the thick of the buffalo, there was, as may be supposed, indiscriminate all around, but the danger of one hunter being shot to shoot another was not great as the hunter generally fired downwards upon the buffalo, the horses ranging alongside around was greatly diminished. The gun used was the old flint lock style, and in rapid firing the hunter generally took some powder in his hand out of his hand without measuring it and put in the muzzle of his gun dropping a ball out of his mouth after it. No wads were used at that time.

MOUNTAIN LIONS.

They are Unpleasant Chaps to Meet When Sharpened by Hunger. On a recent trip of L. H. Gaskill into the district south of Winnipeg, on the trail of a mountain lion, a Canadian correspondent, he saw lions and lynxes and wildcats enough to stock a menagerie. In one canyon, where his party was camped, the burros wandered off and Mr. Gaskill started to find them. When about half a mile from the camp he heard them coming tearing down ahead of him as if the old Nick himself was after them, and they dashed on down toward camp. He knew that some wild beast had frightened them, and, although unarmed, he went on in the hope of getting a glimpse. When he had gone a hundred yards further and had climbed on to a large table rock he was astounded to see four full-grown mountain lions not more than sixty feet ahead of him, and they seemed to have seen him first and were looking straight at him. Mr. Gaskill remembered distinctly that his hair stood on end, if ever a man's did, but he does not remember all the minute details of his return to camp—only that he got there very promptly. He and his partner took rifles and went after the lions, but they had gone.

AMERICAN MEN AND WOMEN.

DAN LAMONT'S income ten years ago was $15 a week. He is said to be earning today $100,000 a year. Mrs. HAMMOND is becoming quite skilled as a watercolor artist and the white house is already adorned by some of her works. Mrs. VIER, wife of the Missouri senator, is a very quiet, retiring little woman of domestic tastes. She is slight and graceful, and has fine dark brown eyes. Recently HAMMOND has taken to reporting. His application for admission to the congress press galleries as correspondent for the Helena Journal was filed recently. As a solution of the alleged disparity between Mrs. Frank Leslie and himself, Mr. White is credited with the following two-to-two answer: "Mrs. Leslie has made industry a study, while I have resided by indulging in laziness."

THE WORLD'S PEACEMAKERS.

ENGLAND has 9,000 mounted yeomanry, costing $450,000 per year. A FRENCH officer in Buisson has invented a hippomane which will register the paces and ground covered by a horse.

FIELD flasks of aluminum, instead of the ordinary glass flasks, are being introduced experimentally into the German army.

THE Russian government intends to construct a harbor solely for commerce at Port, leaving Batoum as a strongly fortified point for military purposes only.

GEN. SCHERFIELD orders that all the men entering the army shall be vaccinated. In order to become vaccinated it is necessary for them to "come up to the scratch."

RUSSIA has ordered 300,000 rifles from French manufacturers, and has given contracts for a still larger number to makers in her own country. On the 1st of July, 1894, she expects to have 1,700,000 new rifles.

ENTERTAINING CLIPPINGS.

The entire coast line of the globe is about 125,000 miles. The horse has no eyebrows, and if much white is visible in the eye itself it is a sure sign of a vicious nature.

The constitution of Ohio gives the governor no veto power, a distinction enjoyed by no other state save Rhode Island.

The old Wall family gave Wall street its name. Lombard street, in London, was named in honor of the Lombards, the first money changers in Paris, were Europe's first bankers.

WARREN crystals are made by blowing a sphere of glass about one yard in diameter, after which the disks are cut from it by means of a disk of compass having a diamond at the extremity of one leg.

STRANGE AND RARE. A SPOTTED turtle twelve inches in diameter and five inches thick has been found on Lake Champlain.

IMMIGRANTS. Canada has a ghost in the shape of a dark, tawny, gigantic stature in shirt sleeves who carries a pistol.

THERE is a strong flow of natural gas in the Ventura river. When lighted, it is said, the flames extend over a space eight feet wide.

It is a noteworthy circumstance that all the men elected to the speakership since the first congress were born in one or another of only thirteen states.

EMERENT LOON, of Marquette, Fla., was born black sixty years ago. In the year 1850 he began to turn white, and the change has continued until he is now almost perfectly white.

ROYAL LAP DOGS. Mary Queen of Scots had a favorite lap dog which is said to have been present at the execution of its poor mistress in Fotheringhay castle. After the royal lady had been beheaded this faithful creature refused to leave her dead body and had to be carried out of the hall by force. At that period lap dogs were the pets of men as well as of women. Dr. Holey, a relative of the unhappy Queen Anne Holey, owned the "which," as it is written, "the dog on." Anne once asked him to grant her one wish, and in return he should have whatever he might desire. Knowing his affection for the dog, she begged it of him, and, of course, the doctor had nothing to do but to give it to her. "And now, madame," he said, "you promised to grant my request." "I will," quoth the queen. Then, I pray you, give me my dog again.

A BIG DOLLARS WORTH.

The Winnipeg Daily Tribune, which is acknowledged to have—by rival publishers—the largest circulation of any paper published in Canada west of Lake Superior, is now offering great inducements to intending subscribers. It can be obtained from now to January 1st, 1895, for $1—a very slight advance on the cost of the white paper used in its publication. At its regular price of $1 a year the Weekly Tribune is certainly extra value, and with the balance of this year free the offer becomes an extraordinary one. The fact that the Weekly Tribune reaches more homes than any paper published, is strong evidence that it is recognized as the great family newspaper. It publishes Dr. Talbot's sermon each week, and gives more Manitoba and Northwest news than all the other Winnipeg papers put together. This is especially interesting to the reader, as almost every district is represented. It can be had from now to the end of the year by sending $1 to the Tribune publishing Co., Winnipeg.

A boon to horsemen.—One bottle of English Sperm Liniment completely removed a carbuncle from my horse. I take pleasure in recommending the remedy, as it acts with mysterious promptness in the removal from horses of hard, old, or calloused humps, blood-spavins, splints, curbs, ewings, stiles and sprains.
